To James Sloan Gibbons

«Boston» Realizing that "there was not that perfect understanding on your part as to what we supposed to be the well known intentions of the Society, we felt that it would be next to impossible to act as we had proposed to do." If the writers' letter of the 26th ult. had convinced the addressee of their views regarding the intentions of the Society and of the absence of any constitutional objection to their taking the sole management of affairs, they might have felt it advantageous to continue. Further, the public statement which the addressee thinks necessary "would be disastrous." The majority of the Committee is, contrary to t[illegible]ddressee's belief, with the latter in regarding the tra[illegible]r as unconstitutional.
